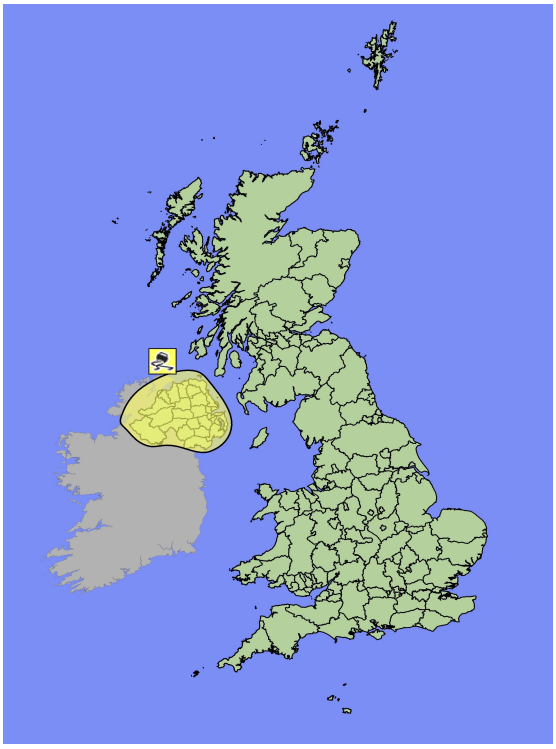
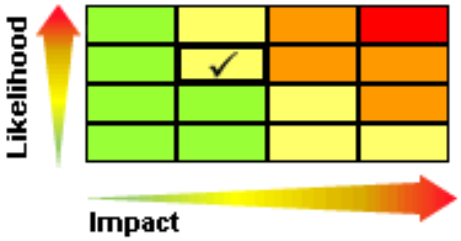
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A band of showery rain is expected to cross from the north on Friday evening. This will lead to some wet roads and a degree of salt wash-off. The rain may fall onto sub-zero roads in some sheltered high level areas. As the cloud and rain clear overnight road temperatures are expected to fall below freezing more widely. Some places may escape the rain though, even here, icy patches and hoar frost will occur on untreated roads.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 03:00 on Sat, 01st Dec 2012 until 11:00 on Sat, 01st Dec 2012

A band of showery rain will cross much of Northern Ireland on Friday evening, clearing during the early hours of Saturday. As temperatures fall overnight, icy stretches are likely to form, especially on untreated surfaces.

The public should be aware of the risk of black ice.
